PRINCIPAL RESEARCH INTERESTS

- Developing and testing interpersonal acceptance-rejection theory (IPARTheory), formerly parental acceptance-rejection theory.
- Interpersonal acceptance and rejection by attachment figures throughout the lifespan.
- Parent-child relationships, and the effects of different styles of parenting (especially warmth, control, and punishment) on the social, emotional, and behavioral development of children in the USA and internationally.
- Intimate adult relationships, and the effects of remembered maternal and paternal acceptance-rejection in childhood on intimate adult relations.
- Evidence based applications of IPARTheory and measures in relational therapy.
- Research methods for conducting the research noted above

OVERALL PROGRAM OF RESEARCH IN THE ROHNER CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF INTERPERSONAL ACCEPTANCE AND REJECTION

After more than twenty-six years of research and publication on the effects, antecedents, and other correlates of parental acceptance and rejection, the University of Connecticut in 1981 authorized the creation of the Center for the Study of Parental Acceptance and Rejection. In 2002, the Board of Trustees at the University of Connecticut renamed the Center the Ronald and Nancy Rohner Center for the Study of Parental Acceptance and Rejection. The Center's name was changed again in 2007. It is now the Ronald and Nancy Rohner Center for the Study of Interpersonal Acceptance and Rejection. The Center, organized under my direction, coordinates an interdisciplinary approach to its three components, viz., psychological research, cross-cultural survey (holocultural) research, and community study research. A network of over 1,000 researchers throughout the United States and internationally are now or have been involved in this program of research.

Psychological Research Component

Involves social-psychological, family, neurobiological, and developmental research within the U.S. and other nations worldwide. Agencies, clinics and private research groups have become involved in recent years.

Cross-Cultural Survey (Holocultural) Component

Two worldwide samples (one of 186 and one of 101 societies) are employed to assess the implications of parental acceptance and rejection for (1) personality development in children, (2) adult personality characteristics, (3) maintenance systems antecedents to such behavior (including forms of economy, political organization, and social structure), and (4) institutionalized expressive systems (including religious beliefs, magic, art, music, folklore, and medical beliefs).

Community Study Component

Psychological and anthropological field studies in communities within the U.S.A., and in sociocultural systems outside America. Within each of these communities, the interaction between parents and children is studied, and an assessment is made of the personality and behavioral dispositions of both children and their parents. A major objective of this component is to embed socialization data in a broader sociocultural context.

MISSION OF THE ROHNER CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF INTERPERSONAL ACCEPTANCE AND REJECTION

The Rohner Center has a three-fold mission. One is to conduct and promote basic and applied research on issues surrounding interpersonal acceptance-rejection, with special emphasis on the form of parent-child relationship called parental acceptance-rejection. The second is to formulate and implement practical intervention, prevention, educational, clinical, and other such applications pertinent to these issues. The third is to foster and encourage knowledge-sharing by establishing the Center as the world's pre-eminent information resource center regarding interpersonal acceptance and rejection. Information is obtained through the collection of existing works as well as through the funding of new research and applications, the results of which are documented and maintained by the Center.
