Cognitive aging of bilinguals: A theoretical analysis

This independent research project was conducted over two semesters. Published research articles and student theses, between 2010-2020, on cognitive aging of bilinguals were collected for analysis. Both samples were categorized per the respective results and if the bilingual advantage was supported or challenged. It was hypothesized that a pattern would emerge from the categorization that may explain why the bilingual advantage is not found in every circumstance. Although no such pattern was identified, other possible explanations for the bilingual advantage were investigated. Review of research on brain mechanisms reported to be involved with the bilingual advantage was included. In conclusion, an argument for where future research on cognitive aging of bilinguals was made.
